"And he causeth all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads: And that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name. Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast: for it is the number of a man; and his number is Six hundred threescore and six."
Revelation 13:16-18, KJV

On April 27th of 1998, Time Magazine published a five-page article entitled "The Big Bank Theory". Outside of banking circles, and those people who are directly involved in some form of commercialism, most people probably did not even bother to read the article due to its highly technical nature. Buried on page three of this article, I found the following startling paragraph:

----- Begin Quote -----

"For starters, you can send the money over the Internet encoded in an E-mail instead of sending a check. This saves you the trouble of balancing the checkbook at the end of the month, and it gives you the option of transferring the money from wherever you want: mutual fund, money market, even an old-fashioned checking account. Your daughter can store the money any way she wants--on her laptop, on a debit card, even (in the not too distant future) on a chip implanted under her skin. And, perhaps best of all, you can program the money to be spent only in specific ways. You might instruct some of the digits to go for books, some for food and some for movies. Unless you pass along a few digits that can be cashed at the local pub, she'll have to find someone else to buy the drinks."

----- End Of Quote -----

For those of you who insist that the infamous 666, or the Mark of the Beast as it is called in the Bible, could never really be implemented due to a strong negative reaction from the general public, and that a credit system based upon a biochip implant is just a lot of silly nonsense dreamed up and believed by religious extremists and fanatics, perhaps the previous paragraph will strike a raw nerve and shake you up a bit. Whether you personally believe it and can accept it or not, the demonic Mark of the Beast credit system is indeed a reality; and it may be implemented much sooner than you realize! I don't know about you, but it greatly alarms me to know that the sick people behind this enslaving system, hope to implement it in the not-too-distant future beginning with our very own children! How long will you wait before you choose to believe; until you are standing in line waiting for your very own personal implant?

As I have stated before, such as in the article "Mondex and the Mark of the Beast", the basic technology necessary for the implementation of this system is already available, and is currently being used in pets and livestock. It is only a matter of time before it will be perfected for use in human beings on a large scale; and it is indeed being perfected, even as I write this article. There have been various news articles published on the Internet during the past several years which reveal exactly how far foolish men of science have gone to make this evil system a reality. Consider the following startling excerpts taken from an article which was published by Nando Times during the third quarter of 1998:

Six-Million-Dollar Man Nears Reality

September 6, 1998

When Kevin Warwick walks into his office, doors open, lights switch on, and a digitized voice says, "Welcome, Professor Warwick."

He could have created the same effects by tucking a smart card into the pocket of his tweed jacket. But by opting to implant a silicon chip under his skin last week, Professor Warwick claims to have become the world's first cyborg - "part man, part machine."

His daughter quips that he's crazy, and his wife says that the experiment "turns her stomach," but the soft-spoken chairman of the Cybernetics Department at the University of Reading in England, doesn't sound like a sendup from a sci-fi convention.

"I come from a background of machine intelligence, looking at how intelligent machines are likely to be in the future," says Warwick, whose publications include books such as "Neural Network Engineering and Dynamic Control Systems."

"There is a school of thought that says that the way humans can keep up with machines is to have silicon implants helping our intelligence, but it's been a bit science-fictiony. I thought technically we can go at least part of the way in that direction, so I went and had a go at it. What I can do now is fairly limited, but it shows some of the possibilities," he adds.

The idea of man empowered by digital ability has always raised ethical issues and deeper questions about what it means to be human. Those issues get tougher as the distinction between man and machine blurs.

When humans started interacting with computers in a box in the 1950s, they called them tools. When students at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in Cambridge started wearing their computers in the 1980s, they called themselves "cyborgs." Warwick's experiment brings the computer literally under the skin.

There are good reasons to do this, Warwick says: For example, such chips could connect up with the human nervous system and help people with disabilities. "Imagine yourself directly connected with a computer, with the memory capacity of that computer at your disposal. Imagine being able to visualize with X-rays, ultraviolet rays, ultrasonic rays, infrared rays - to see in every way that a computer can see: That's where the forefront of technology is," he says, in a phone interview.

But the experiment also raises ethical issues he says he's not prepared to answer as a scientist. For example, a couple e-mailed Warwick the day after his experiment was publicized in Europe to ask if he thought such a chip would be appropriate for tracking their child, who is autistic and often wanders off.

"I haven't replied yet. I dare not reply. I really do not know what to answer. You can say, technically, let's put in a chip and maybe that will limit movement for a child, but the infringement on that child's liberty is enormous, even if you are autistic," he says. "There's a danger that human values and judgments will disappear because we will perceive the world very differently."

Has the experiment changed how he perceives the world or himself? "Just being a human being, you feel physically just what you are . . . With this chip, I have a link with a part of me that is now separate. It's not just me being a physical thing as I am, it's something else out there. Some people would feel the same thing in a spiritual sense," he says.

The response to Warwick's experiment has been worldwide, according to the Department of Cybernetics at Reading University, which offers information about this experiment on its Web site (www.cyber.reading.ac.uk). Comments range from frank congratulations to concern over what Warwick calls "the Big Brother issue."

"We've set off a cyborg race," he says.

If you are still not convinced that there is currently a concerted effort by the International Bankers, and men of science, to perfect a biochip system for the purposes of human identification, tracking, electronic commerce, etc., then allow me to share with you some excerpts from another startling article which was made available on the Internet during December of 1999. While the previous news release describes experimentation which is currently being carried out in England, their American counterparts are not lagging far behind. Allow me to introduce you to "Digital Angel"; or perhaps "Digital Demon" would be a more appropriate name for it from a Christian perspective:

Company Press Release

Applied Digital Solutions Acquires Rights to World's First Digital Device Implantable in Humans - With Applications in E-business to Business Security, Health Care and Criminal Justice

PALM BEACH, Fla.--(BUSINESS WIRE)--Dec. 15, 1999--Inserted just under the skin, with maintenance-free regenerating power supply, miniature 'Digital Angel®' has multi-billion dollar market potential.

Applied Digital Solutions, Inc. today announced that it has acquired the patent rights to a miniature digital transceiver -- which it has named "Digital Angel®" -- that can be used for a variety of purposes, such as providing a tamper-proof means of identification for enhanced e-business security, locating lost or missing individuals, tracking the location of valuable property and monitoring the medical conditions of at-risk patients.

The implantable transceiver sends and receives data and can be continuously tracked by GPS (Global Positioning Satellite) technology. The transceiver's power supply and actuation system are unlike anything ever created. When implanted within a body, the device is powered electromechanically through the movement of muscles, and it can be activated either by the 'wearer' or by the monitoring facility. A novel sensation feedback feature will even allow the wearer to control the device to some degree. The 'smart' device is also small enough to be hidden inconspicuously on or within valuable personal belongings and priceless works of art.

Commenting on Digital Angel's® many potential applications, Richard J. Sullivan, Chairman and CEO of Applied Digital Solutions, Inc. (ADS), said: "We believe its potential for improving individual and e-business security and enhancing the quality of life for millions of people is virtually limitless. Although we're in the early developmental phase, we expect to come forward with applications in many different areas, from medical monitoring to law enforcement. However, in keeping with our core strengths in the e-business to business arena, we plan to focus our initial development efforts on the growing field of e-commerce security and user ID verification."

ADS is actively seeking joint venture partners to help develop and market the unique technology. The company expects to create a working prototype by the end of next year.

----- End Of Quotes -----

Allow me to draw your attention to several key aspects of the so-called "Digital Angel". First of all, according to the news release, while the wearer will have some control over this demonic device, the monitoring facility will be able to activate the device at will, quite possibly without the consent or knowledge of the wearer. It is not made clear in the press release how much privacy will remain with the wearer, or if the wearer will retain the option to block activation by the monitoring agency. Once the implant is inserted, said person will become just a numbered unit in the global tracking system which will be controlled by the GPS, or Global Positioning Satellite system. In other words, unless the device is removed, The Controllers will know exactly where you are, and what you are doing, every minute of every day. You will become one of millions of work pawns in their system of economic enslavement. Please notice, that these articles do in fact emphasize that the primary purpose for the chip will be to conduct normal everyday business, or e-commerce, precisely as the Apostle John described in the Book of Revelation almost two thousand years ago! Finally, you will notice that ADS hopes to create a working prototype of the implant by the end of this current year, 2000.

As I stated earlier, it becomes obvious from articles such as the above, that what companies such as InfoPet are doing with animals today, will soon be normal procedure for human beings as well. In fact, it has already begun, as you will discover as you continue reading this article. Only in this way will the currently-evolving One World Government be able to accurately monitor, track and control the entire world's population, just like a herd of branded animals! If you think that this comparison is rather extreme, then may I suggest that you read my shocking series "The International Jew and the Protocols of Zion", so that you can come to a full realization, of exactly how the International Jewish Bankers view the "goyim", or Gentiles of the world.

What I also find rather alarming, is the degree of boldness with which The Controllers have begun announcing their plans via the mass media. It is as if they seem to be saying to the working class of the world, "We've already got you in our bag, and there is absolutely nothing which you can do to stop us now"; and this is indeed true. The industrialized world has become so dependent upon computer technology, that it is becoming increasingly impossible to move anywhere but forward, and further away from the traditional way and means of conducting business. At this current time, the emphasis appears to be on enticing the merchants of the world into accepting e-commerce, that is, electronic commerce via the Internet, which will ultimately result in a unified, global electronic economic system, in which paper currency, coins, and even plastic credit cards will become things of the past.

As further proof that a Cashless Society controlled by a small biochip implant is indeed the ultimate goal of the behind-the-scenes Controllers, and that the population at large is currently being conditioned to accept such an evil system, consider the fact that just this morning, I received a very interesting piece of email from one of our readers in the United States of America. In his message, he describes a commercial which has been airing on one of the stations in his area. Allow me to share some of his words with you:

----- Begin Quote -----

I was watching TV the other day, and a commercial about e-business came on.

A rough looking character went into a grocery store and started loading his coat up with merchandise. He appeared to be shoplifting. When he finished, he went to the store exit and walked through what looked like a big scanner. He continued walking, then a security office stopped him, as if to make you believe he was being caught for shoplifting, but the security officer simply said, "You forgot your receipt". Then someone starts to say something about the "future of e-business".

----- End OF Quote -----

Dear readers, as I have already emphasized, that future may not be quite as distant as you may think! As I responded to our list members regarding this commercial, the campaign to popularize the microchip implant has already begun; and as time progresses, it will only be accelerated. Let me just note here that in the coming economic system, there will be no physical receipt as was mentioned by the security officer in this commercial. That was simply added to the commercial in order to emphasize the ease of the coming credit system. Everything will be controlled and recorded by codes on the actual products, scanners, and the chip implanted somewhere in a person's body. According to the Prophet John, that will be either in one's forehead, or else in the right hand. It seems to me that the flesh of one's palm would be the ideal place to insert such a minute device. With a simple wave of the hand over the scanner, the transaction will be complete, just as it is done today with UPC's, or Universal Product Codes.

Allow me to draw your attention to the subtlety with which this current propaganda campaign is being conducted. In this commercial, as well as in the previous articles, the coming biochip implant is presented in a very positive light. "Oh, it will be just wonderful!" seems to be the social attitude which is being cultivated by those promoting these devices. This implant will serve to enhance your personal freedom, convenience and security by doing away with multiple credit cards, and the need to remember various passwords and PIN's; not to mention the fact that it will eliminate the frequent need to fill out difficult forms, etc. Everything from your personal credit data, to your lifelong health record and much more, will be conveniently centralized and made easily available to you and necessary agencies through this simple implant procedure. Shopping will be greatly accelerated and simplified. There will no longer be the need to wait while the cashier manually passes your items over a scanner; and waiting for your check to be cleared by the store management will be a thing of the past. Ease of use and convenience will mark the advent of this wonderful new e-system.

Furthermore, because your implant will be locked into the GPS system, your personal whereabouts will be known to us at all times, thus increasing your personal security. Finally, imagine the personal power you will feel when, upon arriving home, your mere presence in a room will turn on the lights, boot your computer and have it read your email to you, activate the coffee pot, etc. It will truly be a spiritual experience! Why, you may feel like an omnipresent god!

The subtlety of the campaign to popularize the biochip implant does not stop here. As a result of the advent of the modern movie, television and music industries, one of the tragic developments of our current times, is that the image of the role model has been subtly transferred from one's natural parents, to the worldly superstars which fill the illusionary world of young impressionable minds; that is, our children. Sadly, this shift is due to some degree, to irresponsible working parents who have used the television set as a babysitter, and allowed it to rob them of quality family time with their children. Thus, the natural result of their error, is that many children now seek to emulate the examples of their on-screen heroes, whether they be good or evil, more than they do the example of their own parents. Tragically, the mass media has only served to reinforce this worship of the idols of the industries. I was reminded of this recently by the following disgusting news clip from CNN news:

----- Begin Quote -----

Fan Sites Feel Studio Glare

Here's the dream: One day in the not-so-distant future, you'll be able to watch your favorite sitcom and -- at the same time on the same screen -- surf the Internet for information on the show and its actors and actresses. There are even predictions that we'll be able to buy clothes like those the stars are wearing, with a click of the remote or mouse.

----- End Quote -----

As I told our mailing list members shortly after reading the above article, America has become so plastic, fake, and lost in the world of unHollywood, that it is sickening. If this is the dream, as the news clip states, then I for one don't wish to have anything to do with it; and in fact, we don't. I thank the Lord that our family was totally freed from the destructive TV demon a few years ago, and we no longer even have a television set in our home. Not only is the world of television and movies way beyond the reality of life, but it promotes few values which are wholesome for the God-fearing Christian family, and many which are in fact dangerous for the same. Family members need to stop warring against each other regarding what to watch on the television set, and start warring against the satanic influences in their lives; beginning with the enticing world of the television set.

American Christians, and in fact, all Christians everywhere, need to wake up and unplug the television set. They need to stop their idol worship of unHollywood stars, and they need to start worshipping the true God of Heaven. While we are told by the television industry that the word "sitcom" means "situation comedy", I can only wonder if it doesn't really mean that you SIT in a pseudo-COMatose state while you are mesmerized, sucked into, and seduced by the Devil's enticing offerings on the family-destroyer; that is, the television set. So what about you? Are you SITting in a pseudo-COMatose state everyday while you watch your soap operas, sitcoms and other silly, time-wasting television shows? Or are you redeeming the time because the days are evil, by diligently studying and obeying God's Word? As the Apostle Paul wrote:

"Redeeming the time, because the days are evil."

Ephesians 5:16 KJV

But let us return to our main point; that is, the subtle campaign to popularize the usage of the biochip implant. If one of these rock stars or movie idols states that something is "cool", whether they say it directly, or merely by their example, such as by wearing a certain style of clothing, or perhaps by fixing their hair in a certain way, then some of their fans are going to want to follow in their footsteps and do the same thing. Suppose that some of these superstars decided that getting an implant was the "cool" thing to do? Wouldn't some of their impressionable followers want to do the same thing? Before you accuse me of going too far with my speculations, allow me to share with you the following news item which was released by the Tabloid News Services of London in October of 1998. Perhaps it will cause you to begin to think differently:

----- Begin Quote -----

Microchips Of The Rich And Famous

[Oct. 12, 1998] -- Sometimes, gun-toting bodyguards, armored limousines and clever disguises just aren't enough.

Now the rich and famous of the world are being offered a disturbing new kind of protection to keep them from the greedy clutches of ransom-seeking kidnappers: A microchip that will actually be implanted under their skin.

The weird device is being marketed to the world's richest families as protection against the booming worldwide business in abductions, which has risen by 60 percent in the last eight years, especially in impoverished and corrupt countries like Mexico, Chechnya and the Philippines.

The new technology, reported Sunday by the Times of London, is a low-power chip that sucks electrical energy from the body itself and -- according to the Gen-Etics corporation that makes the things -- can be detected by Global Positioning System satellites circling the globe.

Designed first by the Israeli spy-masters of the Mossad, Gen-Etics is launching the new "Sky-Eye" chips this week in Milan, Italy. The company told the Times that it has already stitched the $7,500 gadget -- which is aimed at celebrities like Leonardo DiCaprio and families of multi-millionaires -- into 45 of the world's richest people.

"Film stars like DiCaprio and Robert De Niro are the kind of personalities this is aimed at -- basically millionaires, VIPs and captains of industry who for family or work reasons go to places where kidnap gangs are active," Nicholas Ventura, the man in charge of marketing the Sky-Eye, told the Times.

Once a person "wearing" a Sky-Eye chip is abducted, cops and security teams will track his or her location using the satellites and -- presumably -- send in a commando squad to rescue them.

But what if the kidnapers decide to tear the thing out themselves?

Gen-Etics doesn't have a perfect answer for that question, although they're trying. First, the actual surgery to insert the tiny chip is done under an anesthetic that makes it impossible for the kidnap victim to even remember where it was put in. Second, the thing is so small -- just 4 mm by 4 mm, and running on just a few milliamperes of the body's own natural electricity -- that it doesn't show up on x-rays.

But the surgery does leave behind a small scar, and one security expert told the Times that apparently some Mexican kidnap gangs have begun searching their victims for signs of anything like the Sky-Eye.

Besides a hostage's location, the chip could provide one more bit of information. If the signal disappears, rescuers can assume either that the kidnapers somehow found the chip or -- perhaps more probably -- the chip simply ran out of power because its owner is dead.

----- End Of Quote -----

While the tracking device described in the previous article may currently cost thousands of dollars, and is currently being marketed to the rich and famous, as with all modern technology, it is only a matter of time before the price will drop, and it will become available to the common man. As an example, when the computer was first developed several decades ago, RAM, or Random Access Memory, cost millions of dollars; which some people insist was the catalyst for the Y2K glitch. However, today, for hundreds of dollars or less, a person can upgrade his system's memory to easily meet his computing needs. The biochip implant will probably follow a similar pattern. What I also find rather interesting, is the fact that this particular device was originally designed by the Israeli Mossad. More alarming however, is the fact that, being as it is inserted while a person is under anesthesia, he may never even know in what of his body the chip has been inserted. This might make it impossible to remove without technical assistance.

So as you can see, the subtle campaign to popularize the biochip implant is in fact being conducted on several different fronts, as well as by various different forms. Those people who are ignorant of the Word of God, or who scoff at it and reject its truth, are going to play right into the hands of the deceivers behind this plan. Because of the propaganda campaign which is currently being conducted, for some of these people, receiving a biochip implant will seem like the most natural thing to do. Because of their foolish unbelief, they won't realize until it is too late, that this is their personal pact with Satan. Receiving the Mark of the Beast will be their decision to sell themselves out to the Devil in order to continue enjoying the physical comforts and luxuries that he offers them as the false god of this current world. Let me once again remind my readers of the following verses:

"Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world."

1 John 2:15-16, KJV

"And the devil, taking him up into an high mountain, shewed unto him all the kingdoms of the world in a moment of time. And the devil said unto him, All this power will I give thee, and the glory of them: for that is delivered unto me; and to whomsoever I will I give it."

Luke 4:5-6, KJV

"In whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them."

2 Corinthians 4:4, KJV

While I and other writers have speculated that the behind-the-scenes Controllers might purposely orchestrate some kind of national or international economic emergency, which will appear to give them a justifiable reason for suddenly, and perhaps even without warning, implementing the Mark of the Beast plan, I am beginning to think otherwise. Being as they don't want to prematurely frighten people, so that there is even more resistance to the implant, it now seems to me that together with their subtle propaganda campaign to popularize the biochip implant, they have also been quietly carrying out a secondary "campaign of inconvenience". Part of their "campaign of inconvenience" has involved pseudo-voluntary registration with their new system. In other words, a person doesn't have to register with the new system if he doesn't want to, but if he doesn't, then he will simply begin to experience major inconveniences as he tries to carry out his normal business transactions, such as paying bills, etc.

Exactly what is this registration I am talking about? It is none other than the forms one is required to fill out when he opens a bank account. Stop and think for a moment of how much personal data you are required to provide when you choose to open a bank account. Your "friendly" banker learns quite a bit about you, doesn't he? If you apply for a loan, he learns even more about you; and now, with the new "Know Your Customer" policy which was recently implemented in the United States of America, you are so closely monitored, that if you do anything out of the ordinary, such as deposit a sum of money which is substantially larger than what you normally deposit, or if you attempt to withdraw an unusually large amount of money, then you are immediately placed under suspicion by your so-called "friendly" bank. In fact, as a dear friend recently informed me, you may even be called in to explain yourself and your actions. In other words, you are now guilty until proven innocent; but hasn't this become the norm in the United States of America?

As we continue this article in part two, I will further expose the oppressive nature of the American banking system. In addition, we will examine such topics as the snare of banks, e-commerce as a precursor to the Mark of the Beast, Scott McDonald's "Fight The Fingerprint" web site, fighting to protect our children, my fight against fingerprinting and the local banks, guilty until proven innocent, the excessive power of bankers, voluntary compliance, weak Christians and the Mark of the Beast, the patience of the Saints, and only by His Power. I trust that you will join me.

Please go to part two for the conclusion of this article.

Your Not-So-Friendly Bank, Oppressive Jewish Bankers, The Snare Of Banks, E-Commerce - Precursor To The Mark, Rebels And Social Outcasts, Scott McDonald's Fight The Fingerprint Protect Your Children, Fingerprinting And Our Local Banks, Guilty Until Proven Innocent, Excessive Power Of Bankers, Voluntary Compliance, Weak Christians And The Damnable Mark Patience Of The Saints, Only By His Power, Closing Remarks

As I concluded in part one, the American banking system is not as friendly as it appears to be on the surface. In fact, for the small account holder, it is rather oppressive. It used to be that bank customers were provided with a variety of free services, and given initiatives for keeping their money in a certain bank, such as a fair interest rate on their deposits. Now it seems that everything has been turned around. Interest rates are deplorable; there is a charge for everything from maintaining the account to cashing checks; a person is penalized if he withdraws prematurely; and he may fall under immediate suspicion if he does anything which falls outside of his "customer profile". The banking system which is supposed to provide one with more economic freedom, now has a person living under bondage, suspicion and fear; and that bondage is augmented further if one falls into the enticing trap of the credit card and overspends. How true are the following words written by King Solomon and the Prophet Hosea. The modern International Jewish Bankers have indeed learned to live by them as they oppress the poor:

"The rich ruleth over the poor, and the borrower is servant to the lender."

Proverbs 22:7, KJV

"He is a merchant, the balances of deceit are in his hand: he loveth to oppress."

Hosea 12:7, KJV

So as I stated earlier, the minute a person opens a bank account, he unknowingly becomes a registered member of this oppressive system; a system which is slowly and carefully being steered towards the final enslaving Mark of the Beast. The longer a person remains entangled in the banking system, the more he will become dependent upon it, and the more difficult it will become to pull out of it. With the advent of e-commerce, it appears that the International Bankers may have now begun the process to eliminate what until now have been the standard means of daily business transactions; that is, paper currency, coinage, and checks. Once people become more accustomed to electronic shopping, they will continue this subtle process until even credit cards, debit cards and smart cards have been removed; so that all that will remain, will be the biochip implant and scanners. Your worth and usefulness as a human being will be solely determined by your unique identification number, and the value of your credits encoded in your personal microchip implant.

As they continue to tout the ease and the convenience of their wonderful new chip implant system, they will likewise continue to pursue their quiet "campaign of inconvenience" for those who resist it, and who prefer the old methods of conducting their daily business. Such people who do not embrace their new system readily, will be viewed as being non-conformists, troublemakers, social outcasts, and in fact, non-persons. Furthermore, they will be viewed with suspicion, as will become evident as we continue our discussion.

While I have painted a rather dark picture of the future, allow me to inform you that I am by no means alone in my views and understanding of the evil situation which is now unfolding before us. For example, in July of 1997, a home-builder by the name of Scott McDonald launched a web site entitled "Fight The Fingerprint", which can be found at the following URL: <http://www.networkusa.org/fingerprint.shtml>. The purpose of Scott's site is to actively fight against fingerprinting, using Social Security numbers as a universal identifier code for American citizens, and other oppressive means of controlling the American populace. Scott is also the originator of the "Scan This News" email newsletter. SCAN is an acronym for "Sovereign Citizens Against Numbering".

In May of 1999, the president of a company in New York which deals in school cafeteria systems, submitted a letter to Scott's mailing list, in which he inquired about the most feasible and ethical means of implementing an identification system in school cafeterias. This person wrote as follows:

----- Begin Quote -----

Hi

I'm researching the use of biometrics technology in school cafeterias to ID students. What are the ethical issues involved? Is it better for kids to punch in an ID number, have a finger print scanned or have their voices recognized by a computer in order to buy food off of their "account". What are the things we should be concerned about as we deploy cafeteria systems? Who can I talk to about these issues by phone?

Thanks,

As I stated a moment ago, Scott is diametrically opposed to any form of numbering and identification system which will infringe upon the rights and privacy of American citizens. Having said that, please understand that Scott's following lengthy response is meant to be understood in a completely sarcastic manner. He does not support the suggestions he makes here by any means. In fact, as he explains at his web site, his personal life has suffered a number of serious setbacks and retributions from the system because of his firm stance against the very things he ridicules here:

RE: "Who can I talk to about IDs for school lunch programs?"

Hello Eric:

In response to your request for input on the "pros and cons" of some of the various methods and technologies that could be used to identify, monitor, and track children in the administration of school lunch programs, I have the following to offer.

I am thoroughly convinced that as you explore this issue you will ultimately conclude, the only truly secure method for record keeping and monitoring of children is to use implantable microchip IDs.

Implanted microchips will prove to be the only reliable solution wherever "positive identification" is perceived as a need. All of the other techniques you mentioned - i.e. ID number, fingerprint scans, and voices recognition - are too fallible. They are all prone to error and hacking. They are not reliable.

With implanted microchips, a complete and accurate accounting can be made of each child's lunch purchase. Each child can be numbered, monitored, and tracked with no obtrusive interaction with the monitoring system. The children will not even know when or how they are being tracked, monitored, and counted.

Keep in mind: Kids and adults forget login passwords and numbers. People are already becoming tired of all the many different cards and digital keys they have to keep up with. Logging in and out of systems takes up too much time using conventional identification techniques. To suggest yet another one of the conventional methods is not likely to sell well with a finicky public. For these and other reasons which I will get into, I'm certain you will ultimately conclude that implanted microchips are the best choice. They are the only identification technology which will both eliminate the inherent potential for errors and at the same time relieve the recipient of the inconveniences of multiple cards, memorized numbers, and arcane passwords.

Let's face it: ID numbers, ID cards, voice recognition, finger scans, etc., all require considerable, time-consuming interaction with the "accounting device" - whatever that turns out to be. Imagine each student, for instance, having to pause upon entering school to get their finger scanned, then again when they go outside for Physical Education, another time when they came back in, and once again when they leave school at the end of the day. Add to this all the other interactions where ID is necessary, such as the lunch program, testing, counseling, field trips, ball games, after school activities, and - well, you get the idea. All this would add hours to the school day!

The implanted microchip will eliminate all this time-consuming interaction.

Oh sure, there'll be numerous programs implemented in the interim using conventional identification technology and systems. But ultimately, all of these will prove unreliable, tamper-prone, cumbersome to use, and generally unworkable. Why waste time on the other technologies when they are destined to fail?

You would, however, be truly remiss to limit your thinking to only the school lunch program.

As you are undoubtedly aware, considerable attention is being given presently to the issue of safety in public schools. It's perfectly conceivable that whoever first suggests the implanted microchip ID system for school children will be sitting on a virtual gold mine. The key to success will be to time the proposal to coincide with some national tragedy or emergency. A cadre of Congressmen and legislators will also first have to be cultivated. Additionally, you'll need an established bleeding-hearts organization to beat the media drum - the anti-gun groups are well-seasoned at this task. Then, when some tragedy hits and everyone is rushing to adopt a "solution" - any solution - spring the microchip proposal. This is a tried and proven method. The legislation will, of course, need to have already been drafted well ahead of time, so get an early start.

As you know, the pilot programs for microchip implants using animals have been a huge success. The initial phase was to implant non-domesticated animals such as cows and other livestock. The program was then moved on to the domesticated animal group. Initially, there were some who were skeptical of whether the public would accept this application. Those fears were quickly abated, however, when the public rushed out in droves to get their dogs and cats chipped. Presently, over 4,000,000 pets have been chipped. Very soon, a whole generation of kids will have grown up around pets having an ID microchip just under their flesh. These kids will have seen that their cuddly little pet had no adverse affect whatsoever from the tiny number-encoded implant that can't be seen or felt.

Unquestionably, the conditioning process is ripe for moving on to children. I doubt there will be much serious objection from the majority of parents who have, after all, already VOLUNTARILY gotten their children numbered and their pets chipped.

In case you are not already familiar with the technology, implantable microchips are about the size of a grain of rice. Each one has a unique number programmed into it. The ones used for animals, marketed in North America primarily by Avid, use the numbering convention of: NNN-NNN-NNN (with "N" representing a numerical digit). These nine-digit numbers, not coincidentally, correspond nicely with the Social Security Number which also has nine digits in the format: NNN-NN-NNNN. Each child's SSN could simply be programmed into their individual chip, alleviating the need to develop yet another numbering system. The implant only takes a minute and can be done using local anesthesia. All children in a given school could be chipped in a single day.

With present technology, microchip data can be reliably scanned from about 10 feet away. And, the scanners themselves cost only few hundred dollars. The cost will quickly go down as more go into use.

Implanted microchips will stay permanently attached to their host for as long as their flesh clings to their bones - they last for ever.

Remember, the attraction for implanted microchips goes far - FAR - beyond the obvious benefits of simply tracking kids through school. Once the entire population is chipped, State and Federal government agencies throughout the world will finally have a tool to completely eliminate all crime. The problems of terrorism, dead-beat dads, illegal aliens, welfare fraud, insurance fraud, tax cheats, AND ALL OTHER CRIMES could be totally and completely eliminated once the microchip concept is launched!

Eventually, chip scanners will, by law, be required at entrances to all publicly accessible buildings. The precedence for this was set when governments began requiring handicap parking spaces at all public facilities, and with the bans on smoking in privately owned public establishments. It will be a simple matter - with the justification of eliminating crime and fraud - to require every establishment to install microchip scanners at all entrances and then only to allow access to those individuals whose chip-scan is approved. This in itself could effectively eliminate robberies.

Businesses will only be allowed to hire workers who have chips; this will serve to crack down on the employment of illegal immigrants. Only those people with chips will be allowed to drive so that the state can get "bad drivers" off the road. No one will be allowed to board a plane without a chip; this will eliminate international terrorism. All purchases will necessitate a microchip implant which will stop check-writing and credit card fraud. No public, social benefits will be allowed unless and until the recipient has a chip - of course to stop welfare fraud.

A lifetime of information can be easily databased using microchip-based systems. All movement, transactions, and interactions can be recorded and monitored once everyone has their own unique identifier. Every detail of a person's life will finally be accessible to authorities through the widespread use of implanted ID chips. This will take several years - perhaps even a generation - to fully implement. But, it must begin somewhere and school children are the most likely candidate.

All of the tools and mechanisms to enforce compliance are already available and in place. And the public has demonstrated a readiness and willingness to accept such a system.

Once the idea catches on, the beneficiaries (those with implanted chips) will quickly appreciate the convenience of using their microchips for all of their routine monitoring and control applications that they have become so fondly accustomed to - such as licensing, identification, check-writing, traveling, buying and selling, voting, etc. As you can see, the possibilities are truly endless. They'll appreciate the "safety and security" the microchips provide.

Everyone will want a chip because they simply will not be able to function socially without one! The framework for this was developed and established with the Social Security Number. In the future, all transactions and social interactions will require a machine-readable implanted microchip in place of the number. Chip scanners will be installed everywhere; just like the product scanners are now.

There may be some opposition at first. There may be those individuals who'll put up a small amount of resistance. Some will holler: "The Constitution this, and the Constitution that." But those who resist will be labeled "kooks, rebels and trouble-makers with something to hide." The very act of objecting, may land them in jail. If they wont voluntarily get their chip, they won't be able to obtain a license to drive or work. They will likely end up breaking laws as a result. Then, they will be arrested and force chipped as part of the booking process! Besides, most Americans - after they've been reminded of all benefits and services they will sacrifice if they do not participate - will soon acquiesce. This is how it worked when Congress first enacted laws to encourage parents to numbering their children at birth. A few grumbled for a short while. But, once the threat of no longer being able to claim their children on tax returns set in, they got right in line down at the Social Security Administration and had their children numbered, one-by-one.

Besides, give me one good reason that a responsible member of society would object to a simple little ID chip, in light of all the benefits to society they would provide? With all the convenience they'll provide to both society and individuals alike, why should anyone object? Clearly, only lawbreakers and people with something to hide will complain.

Some may raise a religious objection. This will not pose any problem. Everyone will still have a right to believe anything they want to. Besides, no one's going to force anyone else to get a chip; they just won't be able to function normal in society without one. It'll be each individual's own choice whether to get one or not.

By the way, since public schools have been so successful in their campaign to get more children medicated on Ritalin and Prozac, most of the "problem" kids - the "rebels" - are already taken care of. As a result, there will be little resistance from these otherwise "individualistic" children. Therefore, the microchip program is going to be much easier to get established in the schools.

Thanks for contacting me and providing an opportunity for me to address this subject.

Sincerely,

Scott McDonald

----- End Of Quote -----

The fact that this cafeteria company is even contemplating incorporating such an identification system in the school lunch program, is additional proof that the powers that be have already targeted our children as the first candidates to be incorporated into their "wonderful" implant system, just as we saw in part one. Again, this fact alone should alarm the most naive of parents. Do you honestly want your children marked like animals? Fools that we were, most of us bowed to system pressure and had our dear children "tagged" at birth with a Social Security number. We didn't even give it a second thought, did we? Will we also go along with the next part of their evil plan by allowing our kids to receive a biochip implant? May God help us all! Lord help us to have some spiritual conviction in our lives, and to be more concerned with displeasing the Lord, than with being afraid of what man might do to us if we resist their oppressive and devilish plan. Don't be deceived by the ease and convenience of the coming system! Don't allow your children to receive the Mark of the Damned because God will hold you accountable for it if you do! Fight against it no matter what!

Like Scott, in my personal life, I have also experienced a number of inconveniences due to my unwillingness to go along with the plans of the International Bankers. In my case, my problems stem from my refusal to even have a bank account; not that I would have much to deposit in it anyway. My last bank account was closed several years ago by the bank due to non-activity. I was merely paying them five dollars a month to keep the account open, so they finally closed it; even without notifying me first. One day I went in to the bank in order to pay my bills, and my account had simply disappeared from their database. They tried to encourage me to open a new account, but I refused, and haven't had one since then.

It was during early 1999 that I discovered that all of the banks in our community had unanimously adopted a new policy; and that is that all non-account holders would be required to have their fingerprint taken before they could conduct certain business transactions, such as cashing a check. In other words, if a person doesn't have a bank account with a particular bank, then he immediately falls under suspicion and is not to be trusted. He is automatically guilty until proven innocent; and having his fingerprint taken obviously is supposed to prove his innocence; at least according to the bank's way of thinking. It doesn't matter that someone may object for other reasons, such as moral convictions and religious beliefs. As far as the bank is concerned, a person would only object to being fingerprinted if he has something to hide.

As you can imagine, when I first became aware of this new policy, I was quite shocked; particularly because the check I cash each month is issued by the local government. It is not a company check or a third-party check. Well, I was not about to let them get away with treating me as a common criminal so easily. To begin with, I made quite a nasty fuss at the bank so that everyone in the immediate vicinity would hear what was going on. I knew that it wasn't the teller's fault; she was just doing what she was supposed to do so that she could keep her job; but nevertheless, I began to loudly ask her if this was 1933, and if Hitler was in power. I questioned her with what right they could refuse to cash a local government-issued check, particularly after I had presented two valid ID's. I also told her that the bankers have too much power. Naturally, she wanted to quiet me down as soon as possible, so at my request, she called over her supervisor. As you can imagine, this supervisor gave me the cold, plastic smile which is typical of business people, and began to explain to me that this was now their bank's new policy, and that I would simply have to comply if I wanted my check cashed; and then she handed me one of their small pamphlets which explained the discriminatory policy.

I was so concerned, and so upset about this incident, that shortly thereafter, I contacted the office of the Compiler of Laws. After several days, I was informed that there is nothing in the local law books which prohibits the banks from enacting such a policy. In other words, the bankers have more power than even the local government. They can set whatever policies they please, and no one can stop them as long as they are not in clear violation of local laws. They can even refuse to cash a local government-issued check, if a non-account holder refuses to be fingerprinted first. That is how much power these bankers now possess; and I don't doubt that it is happening everywhere.

The following month, I knew that I couldn't go back to the same bank, so I decided to try a different one. Well, I walked in pretending that I was unaware of this new policy which had been enacted on a community-wide level. They had some posters taped up in different areas of the bank which announced the new fingerprinting policy, but I acted as if I hadn't seen them, and walked up to the bank teller with my government-issued check and monthly bills in hand. At first, it appeared as if there would be no problem. The bank teller took the check and the bills; stamped, dated and signed everything; and then she proceeded to ask me for my account number. I explained that I did not have an account at their bank, and then the trouble began.

Again I was forced to argue with another supervisor, but it was to no avail. Even though they had already marked up my check, and stamped all of the bills with the "PAID" stamp, they still would not have the decency to cash the check at least that one time, unless I agreed to be fingerprinted. I had provided two, legal, government-issued IDs to prove who I was; that is, a driver's license, as well as an ID issued by the local police department, and yet they were still adamant that they could not complete the transactions they had begun without my fingerprint; or perhaps I should say they would not complete them, as there is a difference.

These incidents are clear proof that, as I have explained throughout this article, I too have become a victim of their quiet "campaign of inconvenience". Like Scott, who refused to bow to the system's pressure, and thus didn't provide his Social Security number so that he could renew his business license, I could have given in to their demands and simply allowed myself to be fingerprinted, but it is against my moral and spiritual convictions, and so I didn't. This has complicated my life, and forced me further into the corner. I now have only two ways left in which to cash my monthly check; either through a very good friend who has been kind enough to use her bank account, or else through the local government's payroll office which will both cash the check, as well as accept payment for my utility bills. If my friend were to close her account, or if the payroll office were to change its policy for some unforeseen reason, my options would be further restricted.

While I have described my local situation for you in order to prove my point, you need to realize that these local banks are merely puppets who take their orders from their superiors who set banking trends and policies for the world. I am of course referring to the International Jewish Bankers like the Rothschilds, the Loeb's, etc. So to reiterate my point one more time; it is through personal inconvenience that people will be forced to accept the new implant system, even if they grumble about it at first. In the United States of America, they refer to this method of forcing people to do something against their will as voluntary compliance. In other words, the unspoken message is "You don't have to do it if you don't want to, but you will be sorry if you don't.

You better voluntarily comply with what we tell you to do, or else you had better be prepared to pay the consequences for your rebellion. If you don't comply voluntarily, then we will force you to comply one way or the other." That is so-called "freedom" in America.

When the biochip implant system is finally implemented, it is likely that even some weak Christians will compromise their faith because of their need to pay their bills, and obtain their daily necessities, such as food and clothing. They will still be so deeply involved in the system, that there will be no way out, except to compromise their faith and their Christian convictions. There will be no way for them to survive unless they accept the Mark of the Beast. In their state of delusion, some of them may even quote from Romans chapter thirteen, and insist that we are supposed to obey the powers that be. This they will do, because they know not the Scriptures which state that all who receive the Mark of the Beast will be damned; that is, judged severely by the Lord. Consider the following verses:

"And the third angel followed them, saying with a loud voice, If any man worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or in his hand, The same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb: And the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever: and they have no rest day nor night, who worship the beast and his image, and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name. Here is the patience of the saints: here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus."

Revelation 14:9-12, KJV

Notice what the Lord says in that final sentence. He says "Here is the patience of the saints: here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus." In other words, when the biochip implant system, Biblically known as the Mark of the Beast, is fully implemented, it is going to be a time of great testing for the true Saints of God. The Lord is going to find out who really loves Him, and who really believes His Word, and who is going to be willing to endure persecution, hunger, and perhaps even death, in order that they may inherit their incorruptible Crown of Life. It is interesting to note that just as Jesus says "Here is the patience of the saints", He said the very same thing in His sermon that is found in Luke chapter twenty-one. After describing the Beginning of Sorrows, and the persecution which will befall the Saints of the Endtime, Jesus says:

"In your patience possess ye your souls."

Luke 21:19, KJV

For those Christians who are still alive when these final Endtime events begin to occur, it is going to require a lot of patience, in order to continue persevering in the faith during the three and a half years of the Great Tribulation. If you are such a person, you will be publicly branded as a rebel, as a troublemaker, as a social outcast, as a misfit, as a non-conformist, and as a religious fanatic who refuses to go along with the policies of the Beast, including his evil and damnable Mark. You may have few friends; and as the Lord tells us, even some of those persons whom you think are your friends, including members of your own family, may turn out to be traitors. When a person is suffering and hungry, moral and spiritual convictions often take a back seat in his life. In short, you will have to depend solely upon the Lord to see you through the years of the Great Tribulation; but if you do, we find these wonderful prophetic promises found in the Book of Isaiah:

"He giveth power to the faint; and to them that have no might he increaseth strength. Even the youths shall faint and be weary, and the young men shall utterly fall: But they that wait upon the LORD shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run, and not be weary; and they shall walk, and not faint."

Isaiah 40:29-31, KJV

As I explain in other Endtime articles, these verses may be describing the glorious Rapture, when the Saints of God will be resurrected and/or transformed, in order that they might fly up into the heavens like eagles, in order to meet their Lord in the air at His Second Coming. Please consider the following inspiring verses:

"For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be. For wheresoever the carcase is, there will the eagles be gathered together. Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken: And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven: and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other."

Matthew 24:27-31, KJV

"For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord."

1 Thessalonians 4:16-17, KJV

So while the Bible tells us that there are indeed dark days ahead for God's true children, there is also a wonderful Light at the end of the tunnel for those who persevere in their faith until the end. But please remember that none of us can do it ourselves; none of us are spiritually strong enough to keep the faith on our own; so please do not rely upon your own strength or upon your own wisdom; because if you do, you will surely fall flat on your face and deny the Lord, in order to save your skin, just as the Apostle Peter did. If God wants to keep you alive until the Return of His Son, then He will find a way to do it. He will protect you, and provide miraculously for you; for as Jesus Himself said:

"But there shall not an hair of your head perish."

Luke 21:18, KJV

"Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? and one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father. But the very hairs of your head are all numbered. Fear ye not therefore, ye are of more value than many sparrows."

Matthew 10:29-31, KJV

Just remember that only the Spirit of Christ working in you can see you through. Only the Spirit of Christ can give you the love, the boldness, the grace, the patience and the faith, to persevere until He calls you Home. So please, as the Apostle Paul tells us, keep your eyes on Jesus; for He is the Author and the Finisher of your faith. If you do, then like King David of old, you will be able to say:

"In God have I put my trust: I will not be afraid what man can do unto me."

Psalms 56:11, KJV

With these thoughts I will bring this article to a close. I trust that you have enjoyed it, learned something from it, and I pray that it has been a blessing in your life.
