While I am by no means a Prophet, and have never claimed, and would never claim, to be a Prophet, I must admit that recent events in Russian politics have inspired my personal faith by confirming that the Lord can and will indeed reveal things to us if we are in tune to His Spirit. Such is the case with the recent dismissal in August of this year -- 1998 -- of Sergei Kiriyenko as the Prime Minister of Russia. In the article called "Revealer of Secrets and Sergei Stepashin", I wrote in part:

----- Begin Quote -----

In spite of myself, I cannot deny that, for reasons of His own, the Lord sometimes chooses to give me little glimpses of the future. These "spiritual peeks" usually come in the form of strong impressions, and not actually in words, like the experiences I have described on previous occasions. As I explained a moment ago, the Lord gave me the impression that Sergei Kiriyenko, the former Prime Minister of Russia, would not last; that he was too weak; and that Yeltsin should get rid of him before the Russian presidential election drew any closer.

There is no other way that I could have known this. God did it! I was just looking at Kiriyenko's picture, and that was the immediate impression I received; one of weakness, and that he wouldn't last very long. I can't deny that God must have revealed it to me. I am not a real political analyst.

----- End Of Quote -----

It is now apparent to me that when I wrote the above words, less than two years before the 2000 presidential election actually occurred, the Lord was indeed inspiring my thoughts, and impressing on me what was going to happen in Russian politics, because Sergei Kiriyenko is now officially out of office. In fact, he barely lasted for four months as Prime Minister due to Russia's worsening economic situation under his short-lived leadership. To the surprise of the West, for the second time this year, during the third week of August, Boris Yeltsin dismissed the entire cabinet, including Mr. Kiriyenko himself. Following are several excerpts taken from a CNN -- Cable News Network -- news report issued on August 23, 1998:

----- Begin Quotes -----

"Yeltsin Fires Kiriyenko And Cabinet - Chernomyrdin Back During Economic Crisis"

"MOSCOW (CNN) -- In a surprise move Sunday, President Boris Yeltsin sacked Prime Minister Sergei Kiriyenko and the rest of the Cabinet and re-named former premier Viktor Chernomyrdin as the acting prime minister, the Kremlin said."

"The announcement came as the 35-year-old Kiriyenko, who served only four months in office, was struggling to overcome one of Russia's worst economic crises since the collapse of Communism."

"During an emergency session on Friday, the lower house of parliament had blasted the government's handling of the crisis and called for a government of national trust to be formed. The Duma also passed a resolution urging Yeltsin to resign."

"It was the second time this year that Yeltsin had sacked his entire government. He dismissed Chernomyrdin, 60, and his cabinet in March, saying he needed a new prime minister to inject new life into market reforms."

----- End Of Quotes -----

Exactly as I had foreseen through what I can only conclude was the guidance of the Lord's Spirit, Boris Yeltsin finally realized that Kiriyenko was simply too weak, and not the man for the job. To be quite honest, I was rather hesitant about even making the statement regarding Kiriyenko, because I do not consider myself to be a very knowledgeable person in a political sense. If I know little about American politics, I know even less about Russian politics. Despite this fact, I decided to go ahead and place myself, and my reputation, on the limb so-to-speak, by including the previous thoughts in the aforementioned article. It is for this reason that I was greatly encouraged to see my very words fulfilled only a few short months after I wrote them.

As I stated above, what is important about this particular development is that, being the politically astute leader that he is, President Yeltsin also realized that he needed to change horses before the year 2000 Russian presidential race draws any closer, if he expects to be succeeded by someone whom he supports. The following excerpts taken from another CNN news report released a day later on August 24, 1998, confirm this very point. Notice that Yeltsin clearly defines his main motivation for dismissing Kiriyenko; and that is his concerns for the year 2000 election, precisely as I said a few months ago:

----- Begin Quotes -----

"Yeltsin Says Chernomyrdin Recalled To Restore Stability"

"MOSCOW (AP) -- Russian President Boris Yeltsin said Monday he recalled Viktor Chernomyrdin to head the government because an experienced leader was needed to tackle Russia's burgeoning crisis and restore political and economic stability."

"A day after he dismissed the government of Prime Minister Sergei Kiriyenko on Sunday and named Chernomyrdin acting premier, Yeltsin spoke to the nation in a televised address. He suggested Chernomyrdin might be the best candidate to succeed him when his term expires in 2000."

"Today we need those whom we call heavy-weights. I consider Chernomyrdin's experience and weight essential," he said."

"There is another important reason for that proposal, that is, to ensure continuity of the government in the year 2000," Yeltsin said. "(His) main advantages are decency, honesty, and thoroughness. I think these qualities will be the decisive argument in the presidential elections."

----- End Of Quotes -----

As I write this today, the serious economic and political problems in Russia continue unabated with no clear relief in sight. In fact, as you will come to see shortly, the Russian situation has deteriorated to such a serious degree, that a G-7 meeting has been called which will be attended by members of the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank, and the European Union. More on this in a moment. To make matters worse, in contradiction to Boris Yeltsin's wishes, the lower house of the Russian Parliament -- known as the Duma -- which is currently controlled by Gannady Zyuganov and the Communist extremists, has refused for three weeks now to approve Boris Yeltsin's nomination of Viktor Chernomyrdin as the new Prime Minister. Chernomyrdin was the Prime Minister before Yeltsin removed him from office, and replaced him with Kiriyenko.

To make matters worse for the Russian President, those same Communists are likewise demanding Yeltsin's resignation as well. The situation has clearly reached a critical point between Mr. Yeltsin's reformative forces, and the Communist hard-liners -- headed by Gannady Zyuganov -- who desire to return to the way things used to be prior to the supposed fall of Communism and the break-up of the U.S.S.R. less than a decade ago.

What I find particularly alarming regarding these current developments in Russia, is the fact that many of the older generation Russians who have suffered because of all of the economic reforms, clearly support the Communists. These people have grown up with and worked under the seventy-two year Communist regime. That is basically all they have ever known. They have also seen the negative effects that Western influences, such as hard rock music and carnal materialism, have had on their youth, and they don't like it at all. In short, these older generation Russians would quickly embrace Gannady Zyuganov and the Communist hard-liners, were they to suddenly make some significant political gains.

Given the current political and financial state in Russia, this is quite possible, and it could happen rather quickly. In similar fashion, Russia's elderly generation would also gladly welcome the ultra-patriotic Alexander Lebed with his past Communist leanings as well. I discuss Mr. Lebed quite at length in the article entitled "Alexander Lebed and the Year 2000 Russian Presidential Race".

The Duma's staunch refusal to approve Chernomyrdin is not something which should be taken lightly. These people do represent a very powerful force, and I believe that they have very strong economic backing from both within and outside of Russia. In fact, the Russian Communist Party is the second most powerful, and the second largest political party in Russia after the United Russia Party.

One question which was undoubtedly on everyone's mind until a few days ago, was whether Boris Yeltsin would once again demonstrate his political savvy by surviving yet another attack from his political enemies. Would he discover a way to force the Duma to approve his nomination of Chernomyrdin as the new Prime Minister, just as he did with Kiriyenko? Or is the current economic and political confusion going to force President Yeltsin to resign?

Well, as we now know, Zyuganov and the Communist-controlled Duma have forced Yeltsin's hand. While they finally approved Yeltsin's nomination of Sergei Kiriyenko as the new Prime Minister following a week of stiff protest, this time they have pushed Yeltsin to the limit, and they have won. About a week ago, on September 5, 1998, CNN reported the following concerning the continued Communist opposition to Viktor Chernomyrdin's re-election to the Prime Minister post:

----- Begin Quote -----

CHERNOMYRDIN PROPOSES ECONOMIC RESCUE PACKAGE

"Acting Prime Minister Viktor Chernomyrdin called Friday for "economic dictatorship" to end Russia's crisis and preserve market reforms as the hard-line opposition said it would again block his confirmation as prime minister. Outlining plans to stem the country's economic crisis, Chernomyrdin said the government would allow the ruble to float freely, allowing market forces to determine its value. He also said the government would press ahead with market reforms as soon as the situation was stabilized."

----- End Of Quote -----

This is precisely what the Russian government has done too. The ruble has been floating freely against other currencies, including against the American dollar, for several weeks now, and it is faring very poorly. In fact, as the following CNN news clip reveals, as of about a week ago, the ruble had lost sixty-three per cent of its previous value in less than three weeks. For my American readers who don't understand how serious this is, imagine if every dollar in your pocket lost its value so fast, that in less than three-weeks from now, it was only worth thirty-seven cents. Roughly speaking, that means that what costs you one dollar today, would cost you three dollars in a few weeks. That is the current real situation with the Russian ruble. The Russian people's money is losing value before their very eyes. The cost of living is skyrocketing dramatically. On September 6, 1998, CNN reported the following:

----- Begin Quote -----

RUBLE CONTINUES FREE FALL

"The Russian ruble continued its sharp decline Friday as acting Prime Minister Viktor Chernomyrdin outlined plans for an "economic dictatorship" and struggled to convince the opposition party in parliament that he's the right man for the job. The ruble fell 21 percent in Moscow Friday to 16.99 to the dollar. The beleaguered currency has dropped 63 percent since Aug. 17. The free-falling ruble has boosted prices on food products and other commodities."

----- End Of Quote -----

As I mentioned earlier, I do not consider myself to be a Prophet, or a political analyst by any means; but as I am writing this current article, I must tell you that I am feeling something very heavy in the Spirit concerning this entire situation in Russia. I never imagined that I would get inspired writing a politically-oriented article, but I am. You may recall that in my article regarding Alexander Lebed, I stated that due to my Christian beliefs, it is normally not my policy to take much of an interest in many worldly political affairs. However, I have this strong impression that it was the Lord's gentle leading which led me to take an interest in Alexander Lebed, and the Russian situation in general. I cannot think of any other way to explain my sudden interest in these secular matters.

If what I am now sensing, if the impression I am now getting is correct and of the Lord, then as I briefly mention at the end of my article concerning Alexander Lebed, the world may soon receive a major shock. Exactly how soon, I cannot say; but if my impression is correct, then the semi-freedom which missionaries and evangelists have enjoyed in Russia may soon come to an end, if the current situation continues for much longer. The door of opportunity which the Lord opened for the evangelization of Russia may soon close, just as quickly as it opened. It seems that the more the economic situation has deteriorated in Russia, the more the Communists have adamantly held to their position of rejecting Chernomyrdin as the new Prime Minister, and demanding Boris Yeltsin's resignation. On September 7, 1998, CNN reported the following:

----- Begin Quotes -----

YELTSIN WORKS TO FORGE AGREEMENT ON NEW GOVERNMENT

"Faced with one of the most serious political and economic crises since the fall of the Soviet Union, Russian President Boris Yeltsin began emergency talks Monday with parliamentary leaders in a bid to approve his candidate for prime minister. The closed-door talks with key members of each house of parliament came as the lower house, or State Duma, was preparing to vote later Monday on whether to nominate acting Prime Minister Viktor Chernomyrdin as premier. The leaders of two major parliamentary factions -- the Communists and the Social Democrats -- indicated on Sunday they remained adamantly opposed to Chernomyrdin."

RUSSIA'S CRISIS CONTINUES

"The free falling Russian ruble showed no signs of a turn around Monday, as President Russian President Boris Yeltsin told parliament Monday he would defend his choice for prime minister and added a note of optimism about the country's ability to weather its financial storm. Meanwhile, Russian Central Bank Chairman Sergei Dubinin submitted a letter of resignation to Yeltsin, Itar-Tass news agency reported on Monday."

----- End Of Quotes -----

Here we witness a classical example of the rats jumping out of a sinking ship, except this is an economic ship. Sergei Dubinin, the chairman of Russia's Central Bank has clearly seen the handwriting on the wall, and he apparently wants out while he can still hopefully save his own neck. It will be interesting to see how many others will follow suit. This move would be similar to Alan Greenspan -- the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board -- suddenly resigning his post in the United States of America. He would never do such a thing unless the economy was in extremely serious trouble. Oddly enough, the American economy is in very serious trouble, but they don't want you to know about it; at least not yet. At any rate, that is how serious the situation is in Russia. The very next day, CNN reported the following:

----- Begin Quote -----

RUBLE CONTINUES SLIDE

"Russia's central bank suspended trading of the ruble Tuesday and Russia shares remained relatively unchanged, as the political and economic turmoil that has rocked the country in recent weeks continued. The ravaged currency continued its sharp decent at the street trading level. As of Tuesday morning, the U.S. dollar was buying 20 rubles at the currency exchange booths."

----- End Of Quote -----

As I stated above, despite all of his political rhetoric, and his false show of strength, Boris Yeltsin was finally forced to give in to the Communists' demands. Just two days ago, at Chernomyrdin's own insistence, Yeltsin nominated Yevgeny Primakov to replace Chernomyrdin as his candidate for the office of Prime Minister. CNN reported the following:

----- Begin Quote -----

YELTSIN TO NOMINATE PRIMAKOV AS PREMIER

"Boris Yeltsin on Thursday nominated Foreign Minister Yevgeny Primakov to be prime minister in a bid to end a bitter dispute with the parliament that has stalled efforts to stem the economic crisis. Government officials said Yeltsin nominated Primakov after Viktor Chernomyrdin asked the president not to nominate him as prime minister for a third time. 'I cannot harm Russia. Russia has had enough upheavals this century. This is my choice,' said Chernomyrdin, who had been acting prime minister."

----- End Of Quote -----

As of this writing, I do not know if the Duma has accepted Yeltsin's nomination of Primakov. However, this Communist victory may be a dark foreshadow of things to come. Yeltsin has now shown weakness, and I suspect that the Communists will continue to exploit this show of weakness until the year 2000 election. These recent events in Russia highlight a very important lesson. While a substantial number of Americans have erroneously been led to believe that Russian Communism is dead, and that it has collapsed under the weight of its own corruption, there are others like myself who feel that this is the furthest thing from the truth. If anything, Communism may simply be a sleeping giant, or a temporarily tamed beast which is just waiting for the right moment to once again rear its ugly head; and surprise those people who have not seen the handwriting on the wall.

Scripturally-speaking, some Bible students like to point to the prophecies of Gog and Magog -- which can be found in the thirty-eighth and the thirty-ninth chapters of the Book of Ezekiel -- and suggest that the verses are referring to a Communist confederation with Russia at the head. According to this theory, Russia will supposedly lead ten nations of the European Union, which are said to be symbolized by the Ten Toes that are mentioned by the Prophet Daniel, and the Ten Horns which are described by John the Revelator in the Book of Revelation. Consider the following verses:

"Thou, O king, sawest, and behold a great image. This great image, whose brightness was excellent, stood before thee; and the form thereof was terrible. This image's head was of fine gold, his breast and his arms of silver, his belly and his thighs of brass, His legs of iron, his feet part of iron and part of clay. Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshingfloors; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them: and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth. This is the dream; and we will tell the interpretation thereof before the king . . . And whereas thou sawest the feet and toes, part of potters' clay, and part of iron, the kingdom shall be divided; but there shall be in it of the strength of the iron, forasmuch as thou sawest the iron mixed with miry clay. And as the toes of the feet were part of iron, and part of clay, so the kingdom shall be partly strong, and partly broken. And whereas thou sawest iron mixed with miry clay, they shall mingle themselves with the seed of men: but they shall not cleave one to another, even as iron is not mixed with clay. And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever."

Daniel 2:31-36, 41-44, KJV

"After this I saw in the night visions, and behold a fourth beast, dreadful and terrible, and strong exceedingly; and it had great iron teeth: it devoured and brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with the feet of it: and it was diverse from all the beasts that were before it; and it had ten horns . . . And of the ten horns that were in his head, and of the other which came up, and before whom three fell; even of that horn that had eyes, and a mouth that spake very great things, whose look was more stout than his fellows . . . And the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that shall arise: and another shall rise after them; and he shall be diverse from the first, and he shall subdue three kings."

Daniel 7:7, 20, 24, KJV

"And there appeared another wonder in heaven; and behold a great red dragon, having seven heads and ten horns, and seven crowns upon his heads."

Revelation 12:3, KJV

"And I stood upon the sand of the sea, and saw a beast rise up out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns, and upon his heads the name of blasphemy."

Revelation 13:1, KJV

"So he carried me away in the spirit into the wilderness: and I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet coloured beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns . . . And the angel said unto me, Wherefore didst thou marvel? I will tell thee the mystery of the woman, and of the beast that carrieth her, which hath the seven heads and ten horns . . . And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet; but receive power as kings one hour with the beast . . . And the ten horns which thou sawest upon the beast, these shall hate the whore, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire."

Revelation 17:3, 7, 12, 16, KJV

"I said unto the fools, Deal not foolishly: and to the wicked, Lift not up the horn: Lift not up your horn on high: speak not with a stiff neck. For promotion cometh neither from the east, nor from the west, nor from the south. But God is the judge: he putteth down one, and setteth up another."

Psalms 75:4-7, KJV

While I too embraced this doctrine for a number of years a few decades ago, as I reveal in some of my other articles -- such as the series "The Seven Heads" -- after conducting a closer study of the Scriptures, I concluded that if these prophecies are actually describing events of the far future -- that is, from the time of the Prophets -- and not already fulfilled events of the distant past -- it depends on if one embraces a Preterist or a Futurist point-of-view -- then the Beast and the Ten Horns which join it may possibly be more correctly associated with an Arab/Islamic nation, which will lead ten other Islamic nations in a military assault against the tiny nation of Israel. However, this type of scenario still does not leave Russia out of the picture entirely by any means.

It is common knowledge that for decades now, both the United States of America and Russia have cultivated friendships and forged political and military alliances in the Middle East. It is in fact these very alliances which keep the Arab world divided -- that is, aside from their own cultural, religious and political differences, which run very deep -- and this may possibly be by intentional design. I seriously doubt that any of these alliances would even exist were it not for the world's dependence upon Arab oil. As long as these Arab nations are divided in their loyalties between Russia and the United States of America, and as long as they mistrust each other, they are in effect neutralized, and unable to bring about the Arab unity which resulted in the oil embargo of the early 1970s. In other words, it should be evident that Arab disunity is in fact advantageous to Western survival and interests.

However, there is a very real danger lurking here. If the West continues to isolate Russia, as it has been doing by way of the eastward expansion of the NATO countries, which both Russia and China have strongly opposed, or by cutting off Russia's access to her Arab allies, this could result in some very dire consequences. If in months and years ahead, Russia were to return to full-fledged Communism, and if her newly-blossoming relationship with some of the Arab nations were to be placed in jeopardy, I can very well imagine a desperate Communist Russia -- which is still in possession of her nuclear arms by the way -- trying to make a move to protect her remaining territory, and perhaps to protect her interests in the Middle East as well.

To add to this dangerous scenario and powder keg, there is also the explosive issue of the Israeli-Palestinian peace talks; which as I point out in other articles, I believe may eventually result in a full-fledged war, unless the parties involved both back down to some degree in their demands. Of course, if such a war were to ignite at some point in the future, naturally, both the United States and Russia would be forced to become involved, in order to assist their own allies their. Whether this assistance would be done openly, or as is often done by way of supplying weapons, advisers and military intelligence, remains to be seen.

While the American Zionist-controlled mass media has tried to convince us that Communism is dead and a threat of the past, the following CNN excerpt released on September 4, 1998 clearly shows that the leadership in Washington is indeed concerned about the political strength which is now possessed by the Communist-controlled Duma under the strong leadership of Gannady Zyuganov. I have no doubt that while they outwardly tell us that Communism is a past threat to world peace, they fully realize that now, more than ever, Boris Yeltsin's government is extremely vulnerable, and it could fall to a Communist victory, unless something is done quickly to avert it. If this were not the case, why would President Clinton even make the following remark about staying "on a democratic track"?:

----- Begin Quote -----

CLINTON, YELTSIN CONCLUDE SUMMIT

"Concluding his two-day summit with President Clinton, Russia's Boris Yeltsin said Russia has "a lot of tears and sweat" to expend on its struggle to a free market and democracy. Clinton was encouraging but emphasized "there is no short cut." The world stands ready to provide financial help so long as Russia stays on a democratic track, he said. Both presidents described their meetings as successful."

----- End Of Quote -----

What we have here is a clear case of government doublespeak that is reminiscent of George Orwell's famous novel "1984". Yes, Communism is dead they tell us, but we still need to watch out for it. Tell me my friends. What danger is there in a dead beast along the side of the road? Absolutely none; unless that beast is not really dead, of course.

Please go to part two for the conclusion of this article.

At this point, allow me to draw your attention to several important facts. The first one is this: It is my personal observation that today in 1998, local television stations in the United States of America do not report nearly as much world news as they used to do in years past. This now seems to be primarily reserved for cable TV stations such as CNN; that is, the Cable News Network, for my foreign readers. It seems that over the past few decades, local TV stations have been shifting more to national news and local news, and only offer a casual mention of world events. Many of them have become myopic in a reporting sense.

This shift in their news reporting seems to go hand-in-hand with the fact that many Americans have enjoyed a considerable amount of prosperity; at least when compared to other nations around the world. The awful truth of the matter seems to be that as long as our own needs are being met, and as long as we are living in physical comfort without any threat to our well-being, most of us do not take much of an interest in world affairs and things happening far from our shores. "We are safe and secure, so why bother?" currently seems to be the prevalent attitude.

The truth of the matter -- and this probably holds even more true today as I update this article at the end of 2016 -- is that many of us don't even pay attention to what is happening across the state line, or in the next city, or even down the street from where we live. Oft times we are even strangers to our very own next door neighbors and apartment dwellers. So many of us have adopted a rather self-centered attitude, and just exist inside of our own safety bubble and comfort zone. Most of us are, or at least have been, guilty of this at some point. It is the combined result of egotism, apathy, and fear of retribution for becoming involved.

Of course, considering how wicked and violent the world has become, particularly in high-density population areas, I can certainly understand why a lot of people choose to take this protective route, and why their lives have become ruled by fear and paranoia. Likewise, being elderly myself, and not in particularly great health either, I also understand why a lot of folks become shut-ins and recluses, and maintain only the bare minimum amount of contact with their neighbors. But still, there is probably room for some improvement in some of our lives.

Nevertheless, since the supposed collapse of Communism and the breakup of the Soviet Union not quite a decade ago, this attitude of invincibility, apathy and not caring has become even more entrenched in the American psyche. In short, many Americans seem to have their heads in the ground like the proverbial ostrich. In a political sense, and in a worldly sense, a lot of ignorance is being bred within the American population, and they are being dumbed down. So many of us are ill-educated regarding world events, and don't even know who the leaders are of each country, what countries exist in the world today, what the capitals of those countries are, or related information. Even I am no longer nearly as sharp as I used to be in these area. Of course, I can blame my age. Well maybe.

I do not say these things in a condemnatory or a critical way, but merely to make a point. To be quite honest, even the information that is broadcast by all of the cable TV stations is questionable. I am not suggesting that they are always outright lying -- although they do tend to do that a lot too, if not at least greatly exaggerating and distorting information -- but what I am saying is that they do not tell you the things that you really need to know. They release harmless, innocent news -- empty, fluff news that is of very little significance -- to tickle your ears, and keep you in the dark concerning what is really going on in the world, and who is behind it all.

If one were to pay closer attention to the economic news during the past several months, he would quickly realize that what is currently happening in Russia is just the tip of the ice berg. The Russian people are not the only ones who are facing economic hardship. This problem is global in scope, and news agencies like CNN have not been afraid to describe it as such. We have clearly been told that this is a full-fledged global crisis that is affecting the economies of many nations around the world.

The truth of the matter is that the economies of many smaller nations have already failed as of this current time; and it is only the fact that the International Monetary Fund, and the World Bank, have been willing to bail them out -- albeit at a high price to their personal economic freedoms -- that these nations have seemed to continue to operate as sovereign entities. However, this is really not the case whatsoever, as I will be explaining in a moment. From Indonesia to Japan to Southeast Asia to Russia to Latin America, a lot of countries are feeling the current economic crisis, and no one has been left totally unscathed by it.

What is extremely interesting about this situation, is that the American dollar always seems to be at the heart of the matter. When the economies of these different countries do collapse, it is always based upon the value of their local currency against the American dollar. Why is this? What is going on? If every country is truly a sovereign nation with a sovereign economy, why does it even matter how much their currency is worth compared to the American dollar? Part of the reason is because we are being pushed more and more towards a global economy; and that economy requires that there be a standard economic unit against which all other currencies and economies are compared. As I explain in such articles as "When the Pipers Come Knocking", by intentional design, that unit is the American dollar, which is referred to as the currency reserve, or reserve currency, if you prefer.

In addition to this, as I partially point out in the series entitled "The International Jew and the Protocols of Zion", it is also because the American dollar, and the desire to emulate the extravagant, materialistic American way of life, is the bait which has been used to entice these countries to fall into deep debt through overspending. After that, they sell themselves into economic submission to the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank when they fail to meet their financial obligations. As you will clearly see when you read the aforementioned series, as well as the series "Welcome to Greater Israel, USA, he who controls a country's economy, in fact controls that nation.

So when these poorer Third World developing countries fall under the submission of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, exactly who are they becoming the economic slaves to? As you will discover when you read the series I mentioned a moment ago, it is none other than International Jewish Bankers. Don't be deceived. While they may not all look like physical Jews, or may no longer all bear outright Jewish surnames -- they tend to Americanize/Anglicize them a lot -- from everything I have read and researched over the years, most of them are most certainly Jews, beginning with people like the Rothschilds and the Loeb's. Without going into a lot of detail, that is it in a nutshell. Please read the aforementioned two series for more mind-blowing details.

This brings us back to the situation in Russia. Earlier I mentioned that the world may soon face a great shock as a result of developments in that beleaguered country. Exactly what was I referring to? Quite simply, if the current dire situation continues without a remedy, Russia may soon be ripe for another revolution. The Russian people can only endure so much hardship. In less than three weeks, they have already watched as their hard-earned money has dramatically shrunk in value. They are now being forced to pay exorbitant amounts for their daily necessities.

Does anyone seriously believe that they are happy with this situation? Would you be happy if your life's savings suddenly vanished before your very eyes because of government-enforced economic measures of austerity? Would you be happy if a loaf of bread cost you a dollar and fifty cents today, and then four dollars and fifty cents not even three weeks from now? I seriously doubt it. If you were a Russian, wouldn't you begin to think back to the days when the Communists were still in control, before all of these economic reforms began, and when things seemed a little more stable? So goes the thinking.

As I said earlier, the elderly Russians are not happy with the current situation. They liked things the way they were. They would like to see Gannady Zyuganov or Alexander Lebed return Russia to the way that it was before the so-called collapse of Communism. Now, if I realize these things, don't you think that Boris Yeltsin realizes them too? Don't you think that his Communist enemies realize such things as well?

If you ask me, I suspect -- but obviously I cannot prove -- that this may possibly be the very reason why they are being so adamant with Mr. Yeltsin, and giving him such a hard time regarding the election of a new Prime Minister. I think this may be why they are demanding Yeltsin's resignation, even as the country falls apart around their ears. The longer they stall and prevent the formation of a new government which can begin to deal with the current economic crisis in Russia, the more the Russian people will suffer, and think of former "glorious" days under the rule of outright Communism.

In short, my feeling is that the Communists may be taking a serious gamble with the current political and economic chaos in Russia, and hoping that this might lead to popular revolt which will sweep them back into power. If it is not an actual popular revolution, then perhaps it will be a more peaceful electoral revolution, in which voter support swings back to the Communists' favor in time for the year 2000 election. In other words, whether it is through actual popular revolt, or through the upcoming 2000 election in a year and a half, the Communists, led by Gannady Zyuganov, may be planning to take back complete control of the Russian government. Time will certainly tell how the situation plays out there.

Let me again say that the Communist beast may not be nearly as dead as we have erroneously been lead to believe by the false prophets of the Western mass media. The beast may be laying slightly wounded on the side of the political road, but it is only temporarily stunned, and may soon return to power and shock the world. If you accept my perspective, or my speculation regarding this issue, however you wish to view it, then President Bill Clinton's remarks about Russia staying on the track to democracy makes a lot of sense. He obviously sees and knows the danger which currently exists should Yeltsin fall, as do all of the other major economic powers of the world, who have come to be referred to as the G-7.

This brings us to the final CNN news clip I will be sharing in this article. This was released September 8, 1998. Notice again that this report is not just referring to the "economic meltdown" of Russia alone, but rather to the global economic meltdown of many countries:

----- Begin Quote -----

UK CALLS EMERGENCY G-7

"An emergency meeting of mid-level G-7 officials will take place in London on Saturday to discuss the Russian economic crisis and try to hammer out ways to help countries facing economic meltdown. The special meeting of senior finance and foreign-ministry officials from the world's industrialized nations was scheduled after the Duma, Russia's lower house, Monday rejected for a second time the nomination of Victor Chernomyrdin as prime minister, leaving Russia without a government."

----- End Of Quote -----

To conclude this article, allow me to put forth a few more sobering speculations. As I explain in "The International Jew and the Protocols of Zion", there is strong documented evidence which suggests that the Bolshevik Revolution of 1917 was encouraged by, financed by, and even led by Zionist Jews, both from within and without Russia. Names like Karl Marx, Friedrich Engels and Vladimir I. Lenin quickly come to mind. If we believe outward appearances, these Zionist-led Communists lost their power during the historic events of 1989. If we accept this as being true, then it seems that with their loss of absolute political power within Russia, the International Jewish Bankers decided to bring Russia to her knees through economic means, just as they have done with many other nations around the world.

If I am correct, at this current time, they are working from both within the country, as well as from without. In short, it appears that the Communist-controlled Duma led by Gennady Zyuganov is applying political and economic pressure from within, while the International Jewish Bankers are applying pressure from without. All Boris Yeltsin has to do is yield to their demands, and the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank will provide the financial relief which the Russian nation so desperately needs. Of course, if Yeltsin does this, he will be betraying his own country by placing it in even deeper debt to the Jews by accepting their trojan horse; that is, their international currency, the American dollar.

In short, the International Jews may be on the very verge of scoring a major victory towards their goal of complete world domination. No matter how you look at it, the next year and a half promises to yield some very interesting surprises in Russian politics.

As a closing remark, while I cannot prove it, I wouldn't be the least bit surprised if American President Bill Clinton's recent trip to Russia was for the specific purpose of giving Boris Yeltsin an ultimatum. Like others presidents before him, I tend to believe that Clinton is merely a puppet, a delivery boy who has bowed to Jewish financial and political pressure. In light of recent events surrounding the American president, one can only wonder what Clinton has done so that the Jewish-controlled press is now building up evidence for his possible impeachment. Obviously, Bill Clinton has been a rebellious child who has displeased his Jewish masters in some way.

Update December 31, 2016:

Today, due to certain comments which I was making online, I found myself returning to this old article. Believe it or not, but it hasn't received a serious update since I first wrote it in September of 1998. There are a number of other "stragglers" which I hope to eventually get to as well, but it takes time, being as I do a lot here for a single person. Anyway, I just took some time to correct some old typos, and to add a suggested reading resources list at the end of it, and to edit other parts where I found it necessary.

As I explain in the article entitled "Alexander Lebed and the Year 2,000 Russian Presidential Race", neither Alexander Lebed, nor Gannady Zyuganov, won the Russian election that year. In fact, after Boris Yeltsin chose Vladimir Putin as his final Prime Minister in August of 1999, Putin went on to claim the top prize as Russia's new president in 2000. Not only that, but since that time, Putin has served as either the nation's President or Prime Minister, uninterrupted. He has outlasted the last three American presidents -- Clinton, Bush And Obama -- and he is still going rather strong.

But what I really want to say to you is this: I am still not very convinced that Russian Communism is totally dead. In fact, I believe that it is still very much alive and well in the embodiment of current Russian president Vladimir Putin. Mr. Putin's entire demeanor -- that is, the way in which he runs his government with tight control and such a firm hand -- is Communist-styled governing through and through. In that regard, I have to agree with incoming President Donald Trump. Putin is a very strong leader who does not show any weakness. Everyone knows that he is the man in control, regardless of who may hold other government positions around him.

As I have stated before, whatever you do, don't be deceived by Vladimir Putin. He is a very shrewd man. He may not wear a pin bearing a hammer and sickle on his lapel, but the man is a Communist, I do believe. You don't come out of the KGB not being a Communist. As I also point out in "Alexander Lebed and the Year 2,000 Russian Presidential Race", what you may also find interesting is the fact that to this day, the Communist Party is the second largest political party in the Russian Federation, behind the United Russia Party. Not only that, but in every presidential election which has been held in the Russian Federation, a Communist Party candidate has always finished in second place. So, as you can see, this is even more proof that Russian Communism is definitely not dead by any means.

At any rate, it will be very interesting to see exactly what kind of a relationship Vladimir Putin and President-elect Trump develop following the January 20, 2016 inauguration in the United States. As I also mention in the aforementioned article, Putin and Trump are both already beating their big chests, and talking about a new arms race. They are clearly not off to a good start. However, I suspect that Putin sees through all of the garbage that President Obama is throwing in Putin's direction. Thus, Putin is just waiting with a great deal of patience, until President-elect Trump assumes the office of the presidency in three weeks' time. I for one will be watching this pair closely. With their personalities and egos, it ought to be quite a ride.

With these thoughts, I will bring this article to a close. I pray that it has been informative, and a blessing to many. If you happen to have a user account with Facebook, Twitter or Google+, I would also very much appreciate if you would take the time to click on the corresponding link that is found on this page. Thanks so much, and may God bless you abundantly!
